Sacred Numbers

The ancient mythological way of looking at numbers

In ancient times various numbers held power relative to what the belief was at the time. However the priests of old knew that certain numbers held secrets that only they knew how to apply. Numbers used in a measuring capacity had a way of depicting the universe differently from what we see today. For example, to calculate the energy signature of any geometric shape they would use a principle of singular reduction by way of taking any dual number and adding it into itself such as 13 became 4 or 29 became 2.
 $1+3=4$, or $2+9=11=1+1=2$.
It not only kept things simpler but it also had a weird way of working out in strange ways. Well strange to us but not to them!

As an example take 29 and divide it by 12 and you get 2.4166666 now take 2 and divide it by 12 and you get 0.166666 or lets try the first example above in taking the 13 and divide it by 12 and you get 1.083333 and then do 4 divided by 12 and you get .33333. This result only provides 3 types of answers in that each type of energy is represented by the ending type or .3333, .6666 or integers as .25, .50 etc. In ancient times each number therefore had an energy signature associated with it. Within a 3 dimensional world there are three types of energies so they are represented by the three types of numbers shown above.

The priests knew that if those numbers were to be applied to any situation it would tell them what energy type was present as to the results that could be obtained.

The same principle applied to names in that they chose names that were harmonized through the use of this same numbered principle by converting the letters into numbers.

They also knew the principle could be applied to architectural design as well as choosing names so that individuals would be energetically harmonized for whatever purpose.

These principles were forgotten over time and only now are starting to resurface. We have to remember that it is very important to be more in harmony with the universe if we truly want to be an integral part of it in a more harmonious way.

The ancient priests also knew that in order to be in control of ones environment numbers played an integral part in how this was to be done.

For instance one =655 which reduces to 7 which = .583333.

Now take the 655 and divide by $12 = 54.58333$ so here we see the same type but a larger range due to the first 2 numbers 54. The 54 represents a range of compatible numbers that can form a vortex or energy sequence which was used in sacred chants. This example gives us insight into how these chants may have worked.

Complex ? Yes! But and in the last example we see the number level or sequence. (In other words the energy tone for this side of the vortex was on the 54th level. There were others above and below but this particular one required the tone on that level. Then the other side had to be calculated so another word was created using the sacred number sequence by converting the word into number and repeating the process so as to obtain 2 in the sequence. Only then could it be applied.

There are many hidden secrets at the Giza Plateau in Egypt near Cairo and many of them are unknown.

After many years of careful research both on the ground and at his office in Australia Dr Sherwood has uncovered many of these secrets and we are sharing a few of them here with you over the next few issues of the magazine.

Did you know for instance that the pyramid has actually eight sides and not four! If you look at the photo above you can see that one part of the face visible is in shadow while the other half of the side is visible. This means that the pyramid is actually concave on four sides like a dish almost. This acts like a buttress so the pyramid is actually made up of 4 buttress shapes which angle in on themselves thus able to carry the immense pressure and so the grand gallery is also using the same feature as it leans in on itself.

But there is also another reason for the pyramid having eight sides!

Helix energy is associated with a form of energy that requires two groups of four pairs. The way this works is each energy harmonic or tone it has a compatible tone on the other side of the field which in turn has to be compatible with another tone that is not compatible with the first. After 8 bounces if you like back and forth it ends up at the beginning again. The easiest way to explain this is if we take a ball and using angled surfaces 8 times angle so the ball bounces on the same spot it started on. The shape if it was traced would be a helix form. If we imagine that a helix form is like a figure 8 then each loop of the helix has 4 tones or 2 pairs one opposite the other 2 at the top 4 in the middle and two at the bottom which are part of the first 2.

The helix we see is a result of the tones bouncing off each other thus forming the shape of the helix!

As each side of the pyramid has 2 sides $4 \times 2 = 8$.

Now if each dimension has its own helix and we live in a 3 dimensional world then it would mean that each pyramid would have to have different scales or tones to work on an energy field that was 3d orientated.

Now because the sides are shaped like dishes it would therefore make them emit like a dish or satellite dish to broadcast that energy into another system like the energetic grid network that surrounds the planet and that each of us has within our bodies. This would also mean that the dna would have to be sequenced to match that system and it does. We also know that this system can be made transportable for use outside of our own planet so space travel would become possible.

We have found over many years of research that as you change the shape of the pyramid that is change its side angles it changes in what it does. So far we have around 20 variations that we know of.

As for all the science and knowledge of this, where did it come from, obviously the ancient Egyptians had no insight into all the aspects of energy dynamics and space flight so that would mean an external source was involved.

Evidence of extraterrestrial contact came to light back in early 1990 when Dr Sherwood boarded a flight from New York City USA to a conference on UFO's in Cairo. This tale will be in the next issue.

Meanwhile further evidence surfaced that the ancients knew a part of science that we have for some reason not focused upon and that is the geomagnetic principle of hermetic geometry and energy dynamics from geometric shape.

This meant an understanding of the dynamic laws of shape and design in any structure and its potential to harness the energy that exists throughout the universe. Many even today cannot grasp the immensity of the concept as it involves the study of energy with a given geometric shape thus giving one the ability to study how each shape forms its own dynamic energy field through a process of enhancement. The principle of how it does that is the area currently under study with us and to date we have found that each individual shape investigated has some startling effects but it does not end there, early signs have shown also that each design is connected to our genetic makeup and that there is a correlation between this and helix energy. A pattern forms at the base of any helix due to the combination of harmonic tones and energies that form from those tones and that this geometric shape is at the base of the helix. The reason it is at the base is that the helix is the result of the geometric shapes creation. The pyramids in Egypt therefore come under this category as they too have a helix emission being created from their shape, we just cannot see it due to the wave lengths being used by the helix itself. However we do have the ability to hear it which proves it exists. This however can only be done from the pyramids base so that means the helix creation is originating from that position for to affect the helix you have to make contact with it at its source.

This we have done and it is extremely location specific down to a matter of inches in position. Produce a specific sound wave at that location and you can hear the helix spinning due to the effects it has on that specific sound produced at that point.

Remember that even though the casing stones are no longer present makes no difference whatsoever as the overall shape of the structure is what creates this helix.

We have to remember here too that even though the local Egyptians were the best record keepers around there is no evidence in any hieroglyphic form or otherwise that states or depicts that the early Egyptians built these structures. Many want to believe they did but it is more probable that the early Egyptians found them there. The 'People of the Sea' who were the early settlers came ashore and these magnificent structures were still in place and had been for thousands of years before.

For instance the scalloped edging that can be seen on the stones in the image above of what remains of the surround casing stones from the Cheops pyramid in Egypt is a distinctive style and can be found in one other place in specific that is significant for dating purposes and that is at the rear of Abydos on the large stone blocks of the early temple below the Egyptian one. Again those blocks of Aswan granite have no hieroglyphs on them and even though some found on other sandstone blocks there are none on the scalloped ones. There are many examples of advanced engineering modelling in the design parameters of the construction techniques used in building the 3 pyramids at Giza. For instance the term Knbt 'To make the angle' = to extract the square root. Indicates that the ancient Egyptians were familiar with the calculations for the extraction of the square root.

Next issue we will present some startling facts about how they knew how to not only square the circle but also the secret of geomagnetic energy principles which even many do not know about today!

Extract from “Andrea One - Assignment” By Jonathan Sherwood

Meanwhile, on board Andrea1, Shontar is pacing the main control centre of the most modern ship in the Andean fleet.

Andrea1 is colossal in size. Measuring over 2,000 kilometres in length, this craft is literally a floating city. She carries over 325,000 in crew, each a specialist in his or her field. Her weapons system is second to none, and the scientific research facilities on board could rival most in the galaxy. All except the main laboratory back on Andreas. She is completely self-supporting and there is no limit to either her power supply or her ability to stay in space indefinitely.

He turns to the main console and studies one of the monitors, which displays the current readouts on the disturbance.

Suddenly, and without warning, the huge ship shudders to an unseen force and alarms begin ringing. Shontar turns to the main screen to see a ripple of blue energy pass over the ship.

“Raise force fields and stabilise gravity belts,” he commands.

Shontar has been through many a conflict in his travels, but he has never encountered anything as destructive as this. The ship shudders to an unseen hand and he reaches for the handrail and calls for more power to the engines.

“Give me a damage report!” he calls to his second in command.

Eros turns, and calls “The main forward shield is disrupting and collapsing back upon itself sir. We cannot increase power to it any more.”

“Give us distance between the area and ourselves, quickly!” Shontar moves over to the main damage monitors and observes the field readouts on the molecular hull density in the forward area. The readout shows a harmonic deterioration in the gold valibdinum plates of the outer shell.

“Tyree?” he calls. The engineering commander looks across in astonishment for the ship is showing signs of disintegration.

“This cannot be happening sir!” he exclaims.

“The monitors show a major disruption in the forward area. The hull is made of the heaviest metal known to us, yet it falls apart like water vapour.” He hurriedly moves his hands over his console, making adjustments to the energy fields of the forward energisers.

The great ship shudders again and slowly begins to make distance between itself and the space distortion. On the main screen, the scene shows a drop in the size of the energy wave as they move away, until all is quiet once more.

“I want a full report on damage in one solar second of time,” shouts Shontar.

The crew jump at his command. All through the ship, personnel are rushing to make repairs.

Shontar breathes a sigh of relief. He is not easily disturbed but, in this case, he is breathing heavily, yet he remains mentally calm.

All of 6’8 in height, he is well respected by all who serve under him. He has earned the respect of both the crew and the Andean Council from prior engagements. He has no hair on his head, which is large and round. He stands firm and solid, with eyes of steel. He is dressed in the uniform of a commander of the Andean High Command a rank earned years ago, in a conflict with the races in the Orion delta in a nearby galaxy.

Eros approaches him with a look of concern.

“We lost 340 members of the crew, the ship is damaged and we will have to return to the docking planet of Andreas5 for repairs sir.” His statement is brief and precise. Shontar looks blankly at him and looks at the rest of the command crew, who are all busy communicating with other areas of the ship.

“Huyt!” he calls. Huyt is the commanding scientific analyst aboard Andrea1.

“Yes sir?” Huyt replies.

“What are the chances of staying on station here in this location without any further risk to either the ship or its personnel and finding a way of holding the disruption going on out there at bay long enough to find a more permanent solution?” (Continues on page 29!)

Ka-Lei House Orientation

With Rachel Sherwood

In our last issue we introduced you to the Ka-Lei principle and the many facets of it. This sequence of articles will cover the Ka-Lei house orientation which is similar to Feng Shui yet much older and more precise. For those of you who are just joining us the Ka-Lei House Orientation is an ancient process to harmonize your house so that you are living in a healthy and positively energetic environment with no adverse effects. The Ka-Lei house orientation process has been applied with very successful results, and has proven to be very popular in the United States where it was applied in Houston, Texas. Those who have experienced that process have had remarkable responses from the technique and the book on the process is being eagerly awaited.

This is the first in our Ka-Lei house orientation series, through this series we will take you step by step through the process to enable you to Ka-Lei your own living environment. We will start by giving you an overview of the areas we will be covering to give you an idea of the totality of the subject.

The Ka-Lei process starts with locating the northern magnetic energy flow of the planet with a compass and then marking its direction in relation to your house. The basics of the technique is to maximize your exposure to this energy flow to gain maximum benefit from it. It is viewed like a river flowing from north to south supplying beneficial energy to everything in its path. However there are many things that can obstruct the flow of the river, such as metal, electrical energy, even shapes and structures. Yet there are ways of counteracting the obstructions through creative energetic solutions such as water and the use of crystals strategically positioned and harmonized for maximum effect, or simply repositioning certain items to a more favourable less obstructive location.

We will be looking at house plans and architectural design in relation to how structures are positioned in relation to the northern flow and how the energy reacts and deviates according to different designs and placement. Through this knowledge new designs can be built in their most beneficial position as well as learning beneficial layouts for rooms and garages and appliances. Existing layouts can learn their pros and cons and effective solutions to any problem areas.

We will cover the four directions and what works best where and why. How to lay out your furniture to its best advantage as well as your electrical appliances. We will advise on sleeping and sitting positions, even positioning of mirrors and how their influence changes depending on which directional wall they are placed on. We will also cover colours and artwork placed on walls and their influence, as well as ornaments, dvd's, and book placement.

We will even give you tips on how to improve the energy dynamics of any individual room with simple low cost solutions of altering its internal structure.

Another area that is unique to the Ka-Lei house orientation process is the technique that shows you how to eliminate any past influences from the house from previous owner or tenant or even builder, and then energise the house to your own unique energy signature. This amazing application allows you to keep your home clear from the influences of others who may visit your home from time to time, it creates an energy screening on each of the doors so that all adverse energies are left outside the door. We have had some really interesting responses and stories from this technique which we will also include for you to read!

The process is immense, there is much more that has not even been mentioned here that we look forward to sharing with you through this on going column.

Vortex Theory

With Dr. Jon Sherwood

What is a vortex? How does it work?

In the previous issue we discussed the vortex principle but now we shall go through the techniques of vortex development and how it interacts with our own dna and everyday lives. Also how it can be developed to repair the environment.

Over the years we have trialed dozens of different types of vortex processes and one thing is certain and that is they all use a common foundation principle.

There are two ways of creating a vortex one is artificial and the other is through a human method using the natural energies of the brain and body.

In order to understand these two principle methods we firstly need to explain the difference.

Firstly the artificial process derives its process from a sequence of mathematical equations which depict a variety of what we call compatible pair sounds. These pairs can be any number but do have to have a compatibility with each other otherwise the whole process becomes unstable.

This is different from what a few corporations around the globe like in Russia and the USA are presently experimenting with for new energy sources. Theirs is a process of using a sequence of energy tones that emit into cylinders or tubes thus forming a tornado like vortex and then they tap into that dynamic to generate power.

The process we are referring to is a little more complex than that in that the sequence relies on a process of tone interaction creating a third vibration which is the result of the first two combining together. This process has immense possibilities as it uses a universal principle of combining two elements to create a third.

Much like the creation of water Hydrogen and oxygen combining in certain balanced volumes to create water, or H₂O.

If that balance is wrong then no water.

The vortex is the same except we get an invisible energy source that can do all sorts of things. Even create our own DNA which is in itself a helix vortex formation of energy!

When artificially produced from the maths then we can get energy that can work anywhere. We also have a healing tool for genetic regeneration as all cells have a tone vibration and once understood the tone used to fix it is a combination of two others.

As we know from research we have done all energy is a combination of sounds some you can hear and some you cannot.

In the artificial process we have looked at a whole range of possibilities from anti gravity to healing the body, from space travel to weather control and environmental repair. The list goes on but the science to fathom these processes demands a deeper understanding of an area of physics that have as yet not been assessed by most people in the field.

Naturally formed vortex energy which is created through an ancient art we have learnt over the years gives the user the ability to create vortex energies that can have some rather incredible effects of a positive nature. An understanding of the energy dynamics of the body is necessary in order to fathom the precision of the type of thought required as these vortex energies are all thought active, in other words they are controlled by the thought process of the initiator!

No other person can use or program them as they seem to be unique in that they are very brainwave specific.

So it obviously goes without saying what this latter process can be used for! That's why we tend to keep it a little out of sight. Sure we discuss it and those that have seen us use some of them know what these vortexes can do so let's not get carried away here. The reason we have mentioned them at all is because we now feel it is time to let some of this amazing data out there.

An interesting example of a vortex at work can be found in the Great pyramid of Cheops in Egypt and you would have to be in the lower chamber for this to work. It is the only location where you can sit in a specific spot and create a single tone and hear it spin as it gets affected by the vortex within the structure itself. The interesting thing about this is that the spot is only a few inches wide, anywhere else and it does not work.

We have worked with the vortex inside a pyramid structure for years and found that it can have some startling effects from making heat lamps flash on and off quickly (this they do not normally do as heat lamps take time to come on and go off.) To metallic objects changing composition. There are many other applications and even when we built smaller replicas we found that they were just as powerful so size does not matter it is the shape that harnesses the natural force around us.

As we move further into the future we are sure that at some stage this force will become more viable in use as it gets further study and understanding as to its full potential.

The technique for creating a single vortex on an artificial level can be done using just two violin bows one on either side of a metal plate that is flat and sitting on a wooden frame. If this is done in say a smoke filled environment then the vortex (helix) should be seen to rise from the plate. The interesting point to note here is that at the base on the plate also place some fine sand. A geometric shape will form and be different relative to the tones being produced by the bows as they are stroked down either side of the metal plate at the same time. This simple experiment shows us how to discover 2 compatible pairs of sound that when combined will form a vortex in simple form. This one however due to its low power is not as programmable as some of the more powerful cousins it has and they are created using a slightly different process.

Obviously from the study of geometric shape we have found that vortex energy can be manipulated in any number of ways merely by using certain shapes. The difficulty is that in order to find the tones for that shape we have to backward engineer the process back from the shape to the tone energies that created the shape. Not as simple as creating the tones with 2 violin bows. We saw the shape from the application of the bows but here we have the opposite end where we have the geometry but not the tones that formed that specific shape.

To backward engineer the process takes a lot of time and study. For each shape has its own way of affecting the tone and remember that that shapes tone is formed from 2 others combined. So the first step is the gain accurate measurements of the geometric shape in question and then once the measurements are done we can apply a principle to the results that will provide the tones required to create that same shape in the sand on the plate. Thus we discover the dynamics of the vortex energy in the helix that formed that design.

Complex yes! But possible!

In the human application we use the hands we have as applicators. Each hand naturally emits a single tone and different from each side so we already have 2 compatible patterns. All we need do then is activate them so they interact.

Then apply the result in numerous ways from healing to energetic movement to harmonising the environment and many other applications..

So in the next issue we shall look into this and study the way our own energies can interact and form a helix type vortex that can be programmed using our own brainwaves.

See you next time!

Aboriginal Legends & Dreamtime stories

By Deidre Currie Ngundawal Woman Tweed Heads

Legend from the Tweed Valley

Dreamtime stories are stories of creation and also teach us how to care for each other and the land. We are just passing through on our way back home. The following is a story of how the Minjungbal people came to be.

The Three Brothers

In ancient times, three brothers, their wives and grandmother were coming up from the coast in their canoes. They stopped too rest at a place, now known as Evans Head. After resting and collecting food, they decided to paddle further up the coast. But they couldn't find the grandmother, they left without her. They were halfway to Bullinah (now Ballina), when the grandmother returned and found them gone. She went up to Goanna Headland and she called out to the water. The water rose and these were the first waves made on the North coast. The brothers and their wives struggled to keep their canoes from sinking in the great waves. They came ashore at Bullinah and stopped there. They set up camp and went back to find their grandmother, which they did after a long search. She returned to Bullinah with them. The brothers decided they had to populate the land. They left each other, one went to the west, one went to the north and the other went to the south. It was through these brothers that the area was populated and the lore was passed on. The descendants of the brother that went north became the Minjungbal people. We need the past to find the future. We need the old to move to the new. We are in a time where it is important to not only remember and record but to acknowledge Aborigine people and their stories. To bring our culture to the forefront, not just songs, dance and art, but wisdom, knowledge and spirituality. The very core of our ancestors existence for the thousands of years they walked and took care of the land.

The following is a story about a mighty and courageous woman Margaret Kay

Who restored the South Tweed Heads N.S.W Bora Ring at Minjungbal, which may have been lost forever without her intervention. She was shown the Bora Ring by her relatives who visited the ring with their tribe in the late 1800s. It wasn't common for a woman to be responsible for such things, but there was no-one else to do it. So Margaret knowing the importance of the ring to our people became the care taker, it was overgrown with trees and shrubs and encircling mounds had been worn down by lack of maintenance and the passage of years.

She restored the Boraground and applied to council for its preservation, a big step for her time, when natural and cultural places were not recognised as significant. As a result of her efforts in 1961 the Boraground and surrounding natural bushland was reserved for the preservation of Aboriginal relics.

Margaret Kay took up the baton of her Aboriginal heritage and ran with it, we should continue to carry on the work she started in the Minjungbal area.

Wollumbin

Wollumbin a majestic mountain and sacred site to aborigine people, is situated in the Tweed valley surrounded by a ring of mountain ranges. There are different stories attached to the mountain. Some say Wollumbin means cloud catcher or weather maker, others say it means turkey or warrior chief.

Wollumbin The Turkey

Gooriabul (a long time ago) turkeys could fly greater distances than they can today. Well, one turkey flew from Mt. Brown and joined a gathering of other birds talking, when a giant bird approached them. All the birds including the turkey were frightened so they quickly flew away.

The turkey flew all the way to Wollumbin and stopped on top of the mountain to catch his breath, but as he rested, he was wounded in the head by a warrior's spear.

Because of this his flying ability was impaired, that is why turkeys can fly only short distances before they need to rest.

If you look at Wollumbin you can see the top of the mountain has a small bend in it where the spear hit the turkey. The mountain is the point of the warrior's spear.

Wollumbin, Warrior Chief

Legend has it that the spirits of the mountain were warriors. The wounds they received in battles are the scars on the mountainside and the thunder and lightning are the results of their battles.

If you look towards Wollumbin from the north, you can see the face of the warrior chief in the mountain's outline.

Crop Circles 2007

With Dr Jonathan Sherwood

Crop Circle Explorer website: <http://www.cropcircleexplorer.com>

The season in UK started early with 2 patterns in rape seed (Canola) then nothing for the rest of April. The two in rape seed showed track lines that were evident from the aerials and so nothing exciting about them. May came and went with only 3 designs in barley, and were reminiscent of years gone by. Not large approx 300ft across they again showed signs of tracks.

So far the designs showed the markings of man made and nothing spectacular appeared by the end of the month.

Each year we find a variety of patterns that appear in the fields of Britain and elsewhere. Some of the designs are definitely man made while others leave questions which as yet have not been answered. One thing is certain we now know far more than we did years gone by and if people will just take time out to observe and study them and the strange occurrences that happen in many cases are medically orientated then we would learn loads more. But as usual those in various fields of endeavour from medical to scientific to architectural to mathematical all have one thing in common.

'Closed minds!' To say and just eliminate them all as hoaxes is like saying I know the origins of the universe. If humanity knew so much we would be far more advanced than we are in almost all areas of study. But instead we find it easier to ridicule and deny rather than explore other possibilities. Just because one person that is supposed to be an authority on a subject says 'this is the way it is' does not necessarily make it so! They can only pass on what they have been told and picked up along the way but it is not the 'be all and end all'! These designs have been occurring for centuries or longer and we still cannot accept in the majority of cases the fact that there is something afoot that we need to get to recognise.

For instance how many scientists out there understand the dynamics of energetic shape in design and how that shape in the design creates its own energy emission.

This years designs seem to so far be revolving around planetary aspects which is rather curious as many times in the past the patterns have followed almost a conscious alignment with what has been on many peoples thoughts. There have even been cases many times where experiments have been done on the thought creation process where a large group of 20 people have got together and not told anyone else outside of that group the type and shape of a design they all were focusing upon and the following day it appeared in a field near where they met.

This correlation between the conscious thought and the patterns design is one that has fascinated many and we will discuss this now.

All thought manifests through a process called energetic transformation! The ancients knew it as a way to compel matter into form using words of power. The thought process whether spoken or otherwise is a powerful tool and when harnessed can produce some startling effects from miraculous healings to environmental changes. Including weather changes! This process of thought release has been studied by many universities around the globe and still is to this day. The process of manifestation of objects is another where you think of an object or thing and it appears in many cases in obscure places and yet it happens to most of us every single day! We are just not aware of it yet!

Geometric shape and thought structure are one and the same the difference is that one is at one end of the process and the other is at the opposite end. For instance if we wanted to find the energy that formed a geometric shape like say a crop pattern then we would have to backward engineer the process to discover it and we would have to know the route to achieve this in reverse. Whereas the thought or energy end would create the design that we end up rather simple. The brain has two different harmonic energy that which is the result of the combination. In more complex communication quad pairs are used. This means actual harmonic releases. What work on brain emissions is the result of the pairs combining together thus rubbing static charge.

seeing. How this is achieved is really hemispheres and each side releases a in turn combines and creates a third nation of the two. tions in the brain combinations of four pairs of two which results in four is actually seen in medical research release of a static charge which is the gether. Bit like two energy fields col-against each other and the result is a

All energy is polarised one way or another and in the brains system it relies on a very simple universal theory that all energies are connected so only one base field is required thus we have three energy fields plus a static one to keeps us on the ground so to speak!

Each of the designs that have appeared to date in UK are showing signs of man made activity so let's have a look at what geometric depictions have been chosen this time around. Many of the designs show track lines for laying the shape down and they all revolve around 200-300ft in size which is also typical for human creation as anything bigger and it would have to be done over 2 nights as many in the past have shown.

Take some of the Mayan type glyphs as an example.

We have to remember though that all geometric shape can harness the natural energy force lines that exist and in many cases the geometric shape can also magnify this force many times so we do get plant effects in even these designs as well. Man made or not we are still looking at a situation that is pointing at a need to understand the energy dynamics of geometric shape and how it affects both us and our own world in which we live.

So until the next issue where we will give a final report on the crop patterns in UK see you then!

Psychic Spies

Formerly secret documents show how the Ministry of Defence tried to recruit psychics, whose targets almost certainly included Osama Bin Laden and weapons of mass destruction.

Introduction

Traditional methods of gathering intelligence include using satellites, intercepting communications and recruiting agents. Now, secret documents have emerged revealing that the Ministry of Defence (MoD) ran a covert project to recruit psychics, in the hope of tracking down people and items of interest to the government and the military.

Background

The technique is known as remote viewing and a search for the phrase on Google reveals nearly a million hits. Remote viewing is a technical term, but what it really means is trying to use psychic ability - extra-sensory perception - to find things. Uri Geller claims to have undertaken such work for companies keen to see if he can help them locate previously unknown oilfields and mineral deposits. The technique has been used by intelligence agencies too, though details of the British study only emerged this year.

History

The term remote viewing was coined in the Seventies by researchers at the Stanford Research Institute, in America. Their work soon attracted the attention of US intelligence officials. The Americans knew that the Soviets were studying parapsychology and were worried that the USSR might make a breakthrough in an area where the US had no expertise. In the language of risk management, this was a classic case of "low probability/high impact". In other words, there was no corporate belief in ESP and even the sponsors of the study were probably sceptical of the chances of success. But if it did work and if the technique could be harnessed by the government, the potential benefits were huge. That's why it was worth trying.

Both the Pentagon and the CIA funded remote viewing programmes, which went by codenames that included Grill Flame, Sun Streak and Star Gate. A few documents have previously been released under the US Freedom of Information Act and some of the former remote viewers have spoken out about their government work, which included searching for hostages in Beirut, arms dumps, drugs caches and terrorists, as well as attempting to identify the location of patrolling Soviet ballistic missile submarines. In the Nineties, when I was running the MoD's UFO project, I found myself on the receiving end of all sorts of other strange reports. Within government, there was nowhere else to send them, so although such things were technically outside my terms of reference, I found myself getting drawn into subjects as diverse as alien abductions, crop circles and sightings of ghosts at military bases. I was contacted by a handful of people who claimed to have ESP abilities and who volunteered to become 'psychic spies' for their country. I set them a few basic tests and recall being unimpressed by their abilities. But I had regular dealings with the Defence Intelligence Staff (DIS) in relation to my research and investigation into the UFO phenomenon and as I recall, I had some speculative discussions with them about remote viewing. But I don't recall putting anything down on paper and the idea of running an MoD remote viewing programme went no further, at least in my mind. In 1994 I was promoted and left the UFO project for another MoD post. Now it transpires that the MoD did sanction a remote viewing project after all, albeit several years later. Because of the compartmentalised nature of the Department and the need to know principle, I wasn't consulted on this and played no part in the study.

The MoD Study

Proof of the highly classified study's existence was obtained earlier this year by Timothy Good, an author and researcher recognised as one of the world's leading authorities on UFOs and the unexplained. He used the Freedom of Information Act to ask that the MoD release any documents the Department held on remote viewing. His request took several months to process because of the sensitivities involved, but the MoD did finally respond, releasing a 168 page report which had formerly been classified UK Secret. Large sections of the report have been blacked out because the MoD believe their release would compromise defence interests in relation to the working practices of the DIS. Other sections have been blacked out because the MoD judge that release would undermine international relations. This is almost certainly a reference to the US, because the report draws heavily on American research and is likely to include details of MoD liaison with the US intelligence community with regard to remote viewing.

The MoD's remote viewing study was undertaken in 2001 and the report into this work was dated June 2002. Details of the distribution are not known, because the MoD has withheld this information, but only three copies of the report were ever made. Some of the work was carried out by a commercial company, presumably on a contract basis. Again, details of this company's identity have been withheld by the MoD.

The initial plan was that the study should use known remote viewers. An internet search was carried out and a number of potential recruits were identified and contacted, though no indication was given that the real sponsor was the MoD. A commercial property was rented, to further disguise the fact that this was a government programme. However, for a number of reasons, those people contacted either failed to reply or declined to get involved. The study then fell back on the strategy of using people with no declared track record of remote viewing. We don't know who these 'novices' were, but one possibility is that they were military personnel 'volunteered' by their chain of command.

Firstly, the remote viewers were given a detailed questionnaire which included such questions as "at what age did you have your first psychic experience?" and "have you ever participated in a séance?". The experiments themselves were carried out under rigorously controlled conditions. The remote viewers were placed in a room with a monitor (i.e. the person undertaking the tests), who would have photographs of six test targets, which included buildings, places, events, objects and people. Below each photograph was a basic question such as "what is this place?", "where is this place?" or "who is this person?". The MoD has withheld details of some targets, but others have been declassified. They included photos of a wine glass, a knife, a petrol station forecourt and Mother Teresa.

The remote viewers were monitored by a sophisticated array of equipment. Each was recorded on tape and video, and measurements were taken with sensitive electronic and magnetic probes, to see whether electromagnetic fields have a bearing on remote viewing, as some people have previously suggested.

The Results

In the end, eighteen remote viewing sessions were undertaken. Much of the declassified report consists of detailed records of the individual sessions, recording the remote viewers' behaviour during the sessions and assessing the results. Some of the results were bizarre and hilarious. One subject wrote the word "rats" in block capital letters. Another failed to write anything at all. One subject fell asleep and the highly classified report contains the priceless sequence of comments "deep breathing; asleep?", "snoring" and "probably asleep", finishing with a reference to the monitor: "leaves and turns off recorders". Intriguingly, while some remote viewers are adjudged not to have accessed the target, some assessments stated that "the subject may have accessed the target" or that the subject "had accessed some of the features associated with the target". In fact, despite the fact that the subjects were complete novices, 28% of the sessions were scored in this way. Looking ahead, the report's author said that this could serve a baseline against which to measure the performance of more able psychics in later tests.

The report states that two psychologists took part in some of the initial remote viewing sessions, but says that they were unhappy about undertaking this work and refused to take part in further sessions. Again, the details of their objections have been withheld by the MoD.

The Sensitive Targets

The ultimate aim of this study is not apparent because much of the critical information is still being withheld by the MoD. But there is a telling clue in the document that has been released. Reference is made to the first phase of the study, aimed at recruiting remote viewers. There is then mention of a second phase, which the report describes as being aimed at "the selection of one or more individuals who it is felt can be 'trusted' to be used for the sensitive targets".

The "sensitive targets" are not detailed, or if they are, the information has been blacked out. Another part of the report talks about the "conclusion of the task" and makes reference to "follow-up work including the search for ..." - the rest of the sentence is blacked out. So what are the targets? We can't be certain, but based on the CIA's project and bearing in mind the date of the MoD study, it would be surprising if the targets did not include Osama Bin Laden, and perhaps the weapons of mass destruction that some believed Iraq possessed. In a sense, the DIS will have regarded remote viewing as just another potential means of gathering intelligence - and like any intelligence-gathering capability, the issue is how best to focus your capability on current requirements, and in particular, on the high-value targets. Intriguingly, one page that is almost entirely blacked out obviously features a photograph of an individual. The question underneath was not blacked out, perhaps in an oversight. It reads "Asian inhabitant. What colour is he wearing?" Could this have been Bin Laden?

Of course, these were only the test targets and when the story broke, the MoD press office described the study in language which suggested that the Department was simply undertaking an intellectual exercise to validate academic research. Naturally, however, the DIS will have been hoping the study would succeed and would have been looking ahead to the development of an operational remote viewing capability. The "sensitive targets" quote cited above makes this fairly obvious.

Conclusion

Since the story broke in the media I have discussed it with some of the world's leading experts on remote viewing, including Hal Puthoff and Paul H. Smith. I have also been interviewed about it on Newsnight, British Forces Broadcasting Service and numerous BBC radio stations. In all of this I have made clear my absolute support for the MoD, in the face of criticism that this was a waste of time and money (the MoD say £18,000 was spent on the study). My only criticism is with the methodology. It seems to me that several factors combined to make the study less successful than might otherwise have been the case. Firstly, the highly classified nature of the study precluded consultation with the very people who could have given advice on how best to select the remote viewers, test them and develop the operational remote viewing programme that must have been the ultimate goal. Secondly, the selection process was both flawed and unsuccessful. Searching the internet for people who claim to have remote viewing skills would probably have turned up all sorts of con artists and deluded individuals, alongside some of the people genuinely associated with the US government's now defunct remote viewing programmes, or involved in academic research into the subject. But the highly classified nature of the study meant that the approaches to these people could make no mention of the fact that this was a government study, and the MoD was unable to get co-operation from the people they had targeted and whose participation they really needed. My overall assessment, based on my 21 years service in the MoD, is that the study was well-intentioned, but that the errors in the methodology meant that it was a missed opportunity.

So, what happened after the study? Were further tests undertaken? Were lessons learned and was an operation remote viewing programme ever developed? We don't know. But perhaps the MoD let slip one small clue. In responding to questions from the media, the MoD press office said the study was of "little value to the MoD". That's not quite the same as "no value to the MoD".

Visions of Unicorns

Unicorns bring about visions of beauty and purity, appearing from the mists giving the impression of being there but not quite in our realm.

One can have the desire to reach out to the unicorn, to even touch it or be in its presence, yet it is somehow too pure or too ethereal for us to physically make the connection, yet mentally and spiritual its essence can fill our mind with a sense of serenity, knowing, telepathy, and equal understanding, to enable us to find the purity and unity within ourselves, that is the magic of the unicorn.

In pairs they stand,
silvery and white with opposite spiralling horns, male and female, the balance of two,
in harmony with each others thoughts.

Whether unicorns really existed on this earthly planet of ours or not has been pondered for many a century, stories go back through time that speak of them, but whether unicorns existed here or whether windows opened into another realm or dimension allowing those most fortunate to experience their presence is a matter for consideration, as we know so little of our universe and there are surely so many secrets yet to unfold as we open our minds to possibility and discovery.

Maybe there was a time when they existed here as there are so many stories of ancient times and ancient life forms that are so different from what we see today, just as future generations will ponder on creatures that have become extinct in our lifetime.

Ka-lei movement

The ancient art of environmental control.

Damage to valleys from fires, weather and storm direction and control, rainfall control from vortex programming and lots more!

This is the first article ever written on the Ka-lei Movement and as the subject is so extensive we shall cover it over the next few issues.

Ka-lei movement is the art of getting in harmony with the energy of the environment and also your inner self through a process of energising by an application we call the hand exercise. The process has amazing results and in many cases immediate results in both healing yourself, animals as well as the environment.

As an example I shall tell you of a story that occurred many years ago when we first stated to apply the process in the environment and it was not an expected situation.

It was early morning around 6am on the island of Crete and I had organised a group of people to meet on the beach by the hotel for the first mornings Ka-lei movement exercises. We were participating in a conference there and we had only arrived the day before.

I awoke to the sound of a raging rainy gale outside, wind blowing and rattling against the windows of my chalet I wondered if any of the group would brave the elements that morning. So rising before breakfast and walking down to the beach at 7am I was not expecting anyone to show. To my surprise over 16 people had shown that morning and they were all huddled together by a small beach house and a warm greeting met me as I approached them. 'I think we need to do something about this weather!' I said as I stood next to the group.

'Whose ready for this then?' I asked as we all stepped out into the rain and wind. The sky was black and two foot waves were crashing on the shore even in the sheltered bay we were in.

We were thoroughly drenched within seconds of stepping out so it was a surprise to all when we started doing a sounding movement exercise to calm the elements. Within one minute we had a circle of blue sky overhead. The wind had dropped all around us and the rain had stopped, as the circle above our heads expanded it travelled out over the bay and we all watched as the waves flattened and they seemed to shrink all around us. The interesting thing was it still raged around us but now was a good mile out from where we stood in a circle around us. You could see the waves were rough out in the middle of the bay but not where we were it was flat calm.

The effect this had on the group was fascinating for none had dreamed that it could be done but here they were standing as living proof of the power of one human controlling the weather elements.

To this day we see more evidence of just what can be achieved when we work on the elements to create balance and change after humanities effects through lack of understanding of the way humanity interacts with the environment both directly and indirectly. If we are the caretakers of the planet then we must have an interaction with it so we need to understand how that interaction can be taught to others that not only care about the planet but also are willing to take responsibility for their own actions. Many people we see every day do not even want to know and just roll along as if it will always be there. Sorry but that just is not the case! To ignore changes around you is not only stupid but plain out arrogant as well and people who do not bother need a wake-up call!

The planet on which we all live is reliant on our interaction with it and the principles of Ka-lei help us all to do just that.

We have witnesses who have seen how we interact with the environment and repair damage that others have caused through their lack of awareness and responsible action but more people need to know what to do!

It is all well and good to say we all need to do something and in many cases people will respond with but I am just one person what or how can I make a difference.

That's why we have started this column.

The first step in taking charge of the energy of your space or portion of the planet is to get to know the energy around you as it does have a bearing on how well you balance that space. As an example take others near you and explain what you want to do. If they are not interested then simply say OK! What happens to you when the planet on which we all exist changes into a hostile one. Climate change is a nasty situation especially for life forms that depend on it. Thousands of people die from climate change every year and that number is on the rise. It does not take much for you to become part of that statistic. Take the recent storms in the southern states of Australia as an example. Imagine if they got worse!

So your first exercise involves getting to know your own energy.
Do the following exercise once a day to start with.

Exercise:

1. Make sure that your legs are not crossed and both of your feet are on the ground - you can be standing or sitting.

Then bring your hands opposite each other as in the photo.

2. Gently press your palms together and very slowly bring them apart until there is approximately 3-4 inches between your hands.

3. Focus your eyes and your mind on the space between your hands, being aware of what takes place between them. Sitting in this position for approximately 5 minutes is an excellent meditation exercise.

4. When you have had enough slowly bring your hands back together and simply brush your hands together as the following sequence of photos shows, and the energy will return to normal.

As the photographs show the closing off is important as we have found through research that the technique seems to change the body's energy pattern. The hand process is also used in other applications which we shall cover at a later date.

For now we just want you to get used to doing the first exercise. Now during the process when your hands are apart also try thinking of different colours and just observe anything that occurs in-between the hands. The energy in the centre of the space is connected to the thought structure so there should be a response if it is done correctly. The above exercise is also great for studying and if incorporated into a class situation once a day the children's marks will improve as tests have shown this to happen in studies done in the past. We have also had numerous students use the process for learning difficult subjects and the way this is done is you study while the hands are open. This means while the energy is active so you would study after you press them together. But remember to close the energy off afterwards.

Ka-lei movement is the use of this energy in an active way to create all sorts of positive results. One such example was the studying process. In the next part we shall be covering using this process on plants in pots as an example so make sure you have a plant in a small pot. We shall also be covering raising seeds using this process and the results say with tomato plants will speak for itself. So you may want to also have some seeds and a small pot and seed mixture or potting mix ready for the next instalment in the next issue.

Remember to only apply the above exercise once a day to begin with and after a week or two then expand to 2 a day one in the morning and one in the evening and only for a few minutes to begin with. If it gets difficult for you to get the hands back together then take a deep breath in. That should release the force. Till next time. Have a great time exploring!

Arctic Updates!

ATOP Greenland's Suicide Cliff, from which old Inuit women used to hurl themselves when they felt they had become a burden to their community, a crack and a thud like thunder pierces the air.

"We don't have thunder here. But I know it from movies," says Ilulissat nurse Vilhelmina Nathanielsen, while walking through the melting snow. "It's the ice cracking inside the icebergs. If we're lucky we might see one break apart."

It's too early in the year to see icebergs crumple regularly, but the sound is a reminder.

As politicians squabble over how to act on climate change, Greenland's icecap is melting faster than scientists had thought possible.

A new island in East Greenland is a clear sign of how the place is changing. It was dubbed Warming Island by US explorer Dennis Schmitt when he found in 2005 that it had emerged from beneath the ice.

"Some people are scared to discover the process is running faster than the models," said Konrad Steffen, a glaciologist at the University of Colorado at Boulder and a Greenland expert who serves on a US Government advisory committee on abrupt climate change.

In the past 15 years, winter temperatures have risen about five degrees on the cap, while spring and autumn temperatures increased about three degrees.

Swiss-born Dr Steffen is one of dozens of scientists who have peppered the Greenland icecap with instruments to measure temperature, snowfall and the movement, thickness and melting of the ice.

The more the surface melts, the faster the ice sheet moves towards the ocean. The glacier that Swiss Camp rests on has doubled its speed to about 15 kilometres a year in the past 12 years, while its tongue retreated 10 kilometres into the fjord.

"It is scary," Dr Steffen said. "This is only Greenland. But Antarctica and glaciers around the world are responding as well."

The rush of new water leaves scientists with crucial questions about how much sea levels could rise and whether the system of ocean currents that ensures Western Europe's mild winters could shut down.

The Atlantic current has already slowed down as in 2005 the then recent report showed a decrease of 30% in its speed. The problem is the increased influx of fresh water into the North Atlantic both from the Greenland Ice sheet melting as well as increased precipitation and runoff from 5 of Europe's biggest rivers into the same North Atlantic region.

In some cases whole glaciers have disappeared more on that in the next issue.

Remember this is just what is happening in the North but the same situation is happening in Antarctica as well where in one case the Larsen B ice shelf (That's the sea ice.) Completely disappeared making it possible for the landside of the Larsen Ice shelf to begin slipping into the ocean. This report from the Reuters agency! June 2007

If the icecap melts entirely, oceans would rise by seven metres. A total meltdown would take centuries, but global warming — which climate experts blame mainly on human use of fossil fuels — is heating the Arctic faster than anywhere else on Earth.

Greenland, the world's largest island, is mostly covered by an icecap of about 2.6 million cubic kilometres which accounts for a 10th of all the fresh water in the world.

Over the past 30 years, its melt zone has expanded by 30 per cent. Now the cap loses 100 to 150 cubic kilometres of ice every year — more than all the ice in the Alps.

“I would have to make a few computations and also review the state of the outer hull, sir. I will get right on it.” He turns to his console and moves his hands across it studying the monitor in front of him. Meanwhile, in the forward area of the ship, the repair crew discover that the inner hull has been breached, but not severely. The dead are removed and repairs are begun to seal the breach.

One of the crew, an engineering officer for the forward section, calls Tyree on the crystal monitor on his hip and reports that all is well.

Shontar, meanwhile, reflects on the day’s events and the ship under his command.

Andrea1 is the largest ship in the Andrean fleet. Measuring just 2,000km across, much like a floating city, it has all the facilities to maintain life and can also act as a research vessel, as well as an attack craft.

Round in shape, with a large dome, it has one of the most incredible views of the galaxies it passes through on its many journeys that will ever be seen. One could sit in a seat in one of the many lush parks on board and gaze at the stars blazing overhead, or watch as the ship passes through the light barrier to the blaze of colour striations streaming overhead on its way to the time dimensional shift that this great ship is capable of.

One of the most advanced developments on board is the reflective field inverters. They act much like a mirror and can shield the entire ship from any direction from view. When activated, the ship just seems to disappear and yet it is physically still there. The inverters bend light rays and then re-project them to any area of the ship’s hull at a single command. This gives the appearance to the would-be attacker that the stars are in full view and there is nothing ahead of any risk.

This facility, of course, is very rarely used in these days of peace. But, in the past, it proved its worth many times.

Huyt interrupts Shontar from his reverie.

“Excuse me sir! If we could get close enough to lay 8 science probes emitting photonic neutrino beams placed in a circle at certain positions surrounding the anomaly, much as we did around the planet, we could hold the pattern for a while. The duration and life span of the probes would depend on the anomaly itself, sir. But it could be done,” explains Huyt.

“How close do we have to get?” queries Shontar.

“About 4 parsecs, sir,” replies Huyt.

Shontar turns to Tyree. “Can we do it, Tyree, without too much risk?”

“If we can get in and out in one solar second, yes! It can be done with minimal risk. But I must advise that if anything unforeseen goes wrong, we would be destroyed.” He looks pensively at Shontar and Huyt.

Shontar moves to his chair and sits down. Deep in thought for a moment, he then picks up a round glowing disc from the side console of his chair and activates the central ship communications system.

“This is Shontar, commanding Andrea1.” His voice can now be heard in every sector of the giant ship.

He explains the sequence of events about to take place and also Huyt’s and Tyree’s findings.

“We are about to engage in a risky operation, which could delay the anomaly enough for our scientists to find an answer to the problem. However, the risk is great to both yourselves and this ship. Would all sectors now please report into the central command system showing when you are prepared?” Shontar gazes at the central command computer and observes all the lights flash green. He knows that he has a good and trusting crew.

“We will be doing a dimensional light jump in 5 solar minutes.” He disengages the communicator and glances at Tyree, who is grinning.

“You figured that one out quick,” he remarks.

Huyt exclaims: “Of course! If we jump in, discharge the probes and jump out, we will hardly be exposed to the anomaly long enough for it to have any effect.” He turns to his console. “I will begin making the adjustments to the energy grid for the jump, sir.”

Shontar smiles as he contemplates the thought that, Yes, he has a good crew.

Interview

with Jonathan & Rachel Sherwood

Our hope for the future of mankind is that not only will people live together in a more harmonious way but also that we all become more aware of our very delicate existence on this planet of ours. If our future is our children then by ignoring the present conditions we generate we ignore the future of our own children and if that's the case then it becomes a waste of time having children if we do not care and make necessary changes to make the environment and future brighter for them. Our children look up to us for guidance and if we as humans do nothing to save the planet then why should our own children care and take notice if we do not. Looking to parents for guidance is the way we are, and now we see changes occurring that require even more effort on our own part. All the money in the world cannot save the planet from massive climate change once that fine line between order and chaos has been breached!

Religions also need to learn to live side by side instead of constantly battling with other peoples beliefs. If it is not your way then ignore it! Both Rachel and I know that the way forward is one of peace and goodwill but this will and cannot happen unless all people realise that there is more to life than just arguing about what someone else wants to believe. You cannot force someone else to change they will do that only when they are ready and constant reminder pressure is not the way to go. If someone is searching they will find their own path when the time is right and not before. We hope for the future and our journey into space will be a journey of balanced discovery and not one of conflict as we stretch our vision outwards to a more aware future. If one person makes a change then the rest will slowly follow all it takes is time. And that is where we all are now. The only question remains is 'Do we have enough time left to make that change!'

Sacred Symbols

Exploring ancient symbology

The Ankh

The Ankh is considered to be one of Ancient Egypt's most sacred symbols, yet still there is so much speculation as to its true meaning and origin.

By most the hieroglyphic symbol known today as the Ankh translates to the word 'life', and is also used in other words that are associated with life in a similar way that compound words are structured in the English language today, like sunflower for example. Because the ankh symbol is not easily identified like that of many others that obviously resemble the sun or a flower for example, much conjecture and speculation goes on with regard to the origin of this sign and its true meaning.

The word seems to have a strong association with eternal life, the afterlife, the sun, and rebirth, as it is used within words with these meanings such as mirror, as well as combined with other symbology of close association. The mirror is interesting as in many esoteric views the reflection in the mirror is seen as our true spiritual self, and in ancient Egypt many mirrors were made in the basic shape of the ankh similar to that of many mirrors of the ancient world and classical times around the world when mirrors were fashioned in a similar shape without the cross bar, just the handle and the loop. The spelling for the word mirror is the same as the spelling for the word life, it is thought that the life of the person is seen in the mirror. It is interesting that the life seen is Bronze mirror decorated with two falcons from Egypt Middle Kingdom (about 2040-1750 BC) held in the British Museum.

The form of the ancient Egyptian mirror changed little from its first known appearance in the Old Kingdom (about 2613-2160 BC) and consisted of a polished disc of bronze or copper, attached to a handle. The reflective surface was interpreted as the sun disc, because of its shape and shiny qualities.

The handle of the mirror was made of metal, wood or ivory. The above example has the appearance of being as plaited. A papyrus stalk, or the figure of Hathor were also common handles, it could also be surmounted by the head of Hathor. Hathor was particularly associated with the mirror.

Egyptian Bronze mirror, Dynasty 18 (1539-1292 B.C.).

The artefact is preserved in the University of Pennsylvania's (UPM) Egyptian collection and provides significant information on the many facets of the daily life of the ancient Egyptians. The material comes from actual town and settlement excavations as well as from funerary contexts where objects of daily life were often deposited for use in the afterlife.

a reflective opposite to how others see us, just as when we see our reflection in water, looking back at us. A sacred insight into who we really are hidden from the view of others. Not even captured in a photograph as the image is then reversed back to the same as how others see us.

Some scholars believe the origins of the word ankh to be associated with the Egyptian sandal strap. The word the ancient Egyptians used for that part of the sandal was the same as life. The earliest sandals discovered dated back to 2000BC, found in the Fayum district of Cairo, and are now in the British museum, they were held next to the foot by plaited or woven thongs between the great and second toes, then wrapped around the ankles. The shape was the same as the main structure of the ankh, the loop and the vertical piece. Later variations of the sandals basic design were introduced. It is interesting here to mention that the young king Tut-ankh-amun had many pairs of luxurious sandals found in his burial tomb, as they would make his journey to the afterworld more comfortable. His wife Ankhesenamum also had sandals in her burial tomb, again they were for the journey to the afterlife as they had not previously been worn (her actual sandals are an exhibit in the British Museum). Sandals were also seen as a symbol of power and as such were only worn on special occasions by those of royalty and in powerful positions.

Another word with the same spelling as that of life is the Egyptian word for 'bouquet'. Flowers were a symbol of life and regeneration and were offered in large amounts and in large bouquets on festival days. In a single year over a million flower offerings were documented at the Great Temple of Anum at Karnak. It is interesting to note that we are again looking at the same basic shape as the ankh with a budding flower or a bouquet of flowers.

The ancient Egyptian musical instrument known as the sistrum is also associated with the Ankh or symbol for life mainly because its basic shape resembled the symbol, and also because it was very much associated with the gods and their powers, Hathor in particular. The head of Hathor was often depicted on the handle. This basic shape was also incorporated into the pillar design of her temple in Dendera. Her priestesses were shown in ceremonies with the sistrum as well as another instrument thought to be a necklace rattle that was called the menat. The menat was also constructed in the same basic shape as the ankh, similar to an old fashioned keyhole shape. The two were considered sacred instruments associated with life, birth and rebirth, and the gods.

There are other representations of this basic symbol, the tie emblem on ceremonial clothing has also been suggested. Again we are talking about the basic structure of the ankh. It is interesting that when tracking the origin of the symbol for life one finds that the cross bar below the loop is not included, one has to question whether this is a later addition.

The ancient Egyptians believed the Ankh symbol to have an association with magic, as they wore the symbol as an amulet within jewellery such as a ring or a necklace to guard against ill health, indeed they believed the symbol to be truly life empowering. It was no doubt a very sacred symbol as is shown through the objects that bear its name, resemblance, and association. During the time that Akhenaten ruled Egypt the ankh symbol was portrayed coming out of hands at the end of extensions of the suns rays, portraying the sun as the giver of life. The symbol was also shown on temple and tomb art in the hands of the gods and given to kings and queen through the mouth (thought to be the breath of life).

The basic symbol of the Ankh, that is when the cross bar is omitted, seems to have a strong significance in ceremony and spiritual beliefs, particularly with Hathor, goddess of birth and rebirth. The Ankh was also associated with great and sacred knowledge through its use in the name House of Life (per ankh) , an institution associated with the temples, somewhat similar to a library or university of learning and taking care of ancient texts. The large collection of books kept in the houses of life were famous throughout much of the ancient world and were thought to cover such subjects as magic, astronomy, medicine, writing, art, theology, ritual and more. The houses of life were thought to be the models on which the great library of Alexandria was based.

No doubt the deeper meaning of this symbol encompasses life on a total scale, perhaps the key to life, who we are, taking us beyond this life, the after life, the stars, sacred knowledge, perhaps on a grander universal level. We may well be looking at a universal symbol with greater meaning yet to be unlocked.

Ancient Remedies

Aloe Vera

Many ancient remedies originated from ancient Egypt as Egyptian herbalism and other areas of medicine were highly developed for their time. The ancient Greeks visited Egypt and studied their knowledge and through this much of it was reproduced through Greek herbals and was then passed on to medieval Europe and renaissance scholars.

Aloe Vera was recognised for its medicinal value by the ancient Egyptians, and was also used as one of the embalming ingredients. It was an ancient remedy for worms, soothing chest pains, burns, ulcers, skin disease and allergies, and was also used to relieve headaches.

Aloe Vera is a succulent growing to 40 - 60 cm tall in tropical and subtropical regions, in sunny dry areas. The leaves are cut and the sap is used fresh, preserved, bottled or dried. Today the gel from the leaf is widely used, it is applied externally to the skin for burns, sunburn, eczema, skin irritations and wounds. It is also taken internally for digestive tract problems.

The aloe vera plant is renowned for its healing properties. It has anti-inflammatory and anti-microbial agents, antioxidant vitamins C, E, B12, beta-carotene and lignin, a woody substance giving it an excellent ability to penetrate the skin and tissue. It also contains minerals, as well as immune system boosting properties.

Environment Reports.....

Within less than the span of a lifetime, Sydney could resemble a desert town like Alice Springs, or even the apocalyptic landscape from Cormac McCarthy's new novel, The Road.

Scorched by temperatures five degrees higher than today, lacking drinking water and yet battered by rising seas and ravaged by bush fires of the ferocity that last month blackened huge areas of Victoria and Tasmania, one of the world's most spectacular cities could be virtually uninhabitable.

So suggests a scientific report on climate change commissioned by the New South Wales government.

The report, which forecasts a 40 per cent drop in rainfall by 2070, presses hard on the heels of the shock announcement by Queensland's Premier that from next December state residents stand to drink recycled sewerage. But so what London recycles 5 times and it still tastes good and you would not know.

Australia - which along with America still refuses to sign the Kyoto protocol - receives a further doomsday warning, with the publication of a UN study by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. This predicts that in 30 years the Barrier Reef could well be dead, a victim of rising sea temperatures coupled with bleaching of the fragile coral.

Much as I'd like to accuse these reports of hysterical misrepresentation, I find I can't. Arriving last week in Tasmania, I'm able to vouch safe that this normally temperate state is enduring its most savage drought in living memory.

The fields and vineyards are the colour of the camels I once saw near Ayer's Rock. Snakebites are on the rise, as copperheads and tiger-snakes creep closer to human habitation in search of water. Last night, coming out to watch a comet that had appeared from nowhere, I scattered ten wallabies cropping the grass. A year ago, these timid creatures never came near the house.

Then we have the honey bee situation in the USA. Literally dozens of bee hives are empty and no one knows why. They just vanished and its never been like this before! And its spreading! If we think about what 'Albert Einstein' once said about the humble bee. 'If the honey bee disappears then humanity has 4 years left!' And that's due to the way the plants are pollinated. These little honey bee guys do a great job or used too. So bit like 'Hitchhikers guide with the dolphins' 'Thanks for all the fish' this one is 'Gee thanks for all the honey!'

Our planet is dramatically changing and faster than anyone really thought. Both signs from animals as well as weather changes indicate we are on a rough road ahead and yet governments constantly argue about their economy. Well boys and girls think about this one! 'If there is no planet to live one where is your economy then!' It will cost each economy more later than now. It's time to change the way ministers think about the environment and stop ignoring the inevitable. We have affected the planets biosphere and its up to us to fix it as it won't do it calmly on its own.

Present reports are showing that the Greenland ice sheet is melting faster and new research each year keeps showing an increase and the same problem exists in the South on the Antarctic Peninsula.

Can you handle a 25m sea rise at your present location because it is fast becoming a reality in this lifetime.

The Initiates Path

A Journey down the Nile

This is a guided tour of an Ancient Path used by the Ancient Priests of Egypt to Initiate their selected young into the higher teachings of their secret order.

Each step of your journey will be one of excitement and challenge as you face personal fears and the opening of your mind to the greatest secrets of the ancients. Each temple has its own path and can only be identified by someone who has studied the priests mysteries of old.

Here then for your enjoyment is a brief insight into this remarkable journey that people can now enjoy.

In our last issue we explored Philae, the first step in the Initiates Pathway, our next stop along the Nile is..... KOMOMBO This is not part of the Initiates Path but is of interest. How about mummified crocodiles!!!!

This is a guided tour of an Ancient Path used by the Ancient Priests of Egypt to Initiate their selected young into the higher teachings of their secret order. This Pathway must be carefully timed with the harmonic cycles of the year in order to obtain the desired results. Therefore it is imperative that the harmonic cycles should be fully understood before entering into a pathway journey otherwise if your timing is not correct then the desired response will not be obtained.

Each step of your journey will be one of excitement and challenge as you face personal fears and the opening of your mind to the greatest secrets of the ancients. Each temple has its own path and can only be identified by someone who has studied the priests mysteries of old. That is why Dr Sherwood who has studied the ancient mysteries of Egypt for 30 years, and with his new recent discovery in Egypt regarding the harmonic calendar ,leads these new discovery tours to Egypt so that the general public can partake in this exciting journey with the final destination being the ceremony of the Initiate which is held in the Great Pyramid using harmonic sounds to enhance the individuals perceptive and precognitive abilities, thus preparing them for the next shift in human consciousness.

Here then for your enjoyment is part two of a brief insight into this remarkable journey that people can now enjoy. Booking tours for the Initiates Path are available now!

KOMOMBO

TEMPLES OF UPPER AND LOWER EGYPT THE MYSTICAL PATH - PART TWO

Temple of Komombo.

This is a small temple located right along side the Nile. It is dedicated to crocodiles and there are some mummified remains on display.

We will not cover this more recent one as we want to take you to one of the best temples of Egypt.

IDFU

Main Idfu Pylons with huge reliefs of Horus.

This is the best complete temple intact that you will see. However the special reason for my interest in Idfu is because it is dedicated to Horus. Idfu has an initiation pathway and can only be identified with care.

When you first face the main port-culis you will notice that on the Left side the Ankh is held in the Left hand of Horus, while on the Right side the Ankh is held in the Right hand. When you have passed through the main entrance and turn to face the main entrance from the inside, you again will find the same feature. As you walk into the main temple you must find the Ankh that is held in the left hand. It will be to your Left as you enter. Do not follow the wall as this is a false trail. You must search through the pillars by observing the Ankh's on them. This will eventually lead you to the next chamber. The degree of difficulty will increase as you pass deeper into the temple. Once found you must follow this feature until you arrive at the far end of the main temple. There are many anti-rooms on your journey some you will enter and some you will not. Your goal is the anti-room at the far end of the temple behind the main alter. This final anti-room is where the Priests held their secret initiation rights for higher consciousness once they had led the initiates through the path. As you follow this path from beginning to end you will feel (physically) energy working on you. Your awareness will improve and many other aspects will become noticeable. This of course will vary from person to person.

Only after you have traversed the entire path should you enter the main center place. Once there you should stand at the alter and meditate and use sound meditation to amplify the energy for spiritual awareness.

These techniques are thousands of years old and work!

Afterwards you may stroll the grounds and enjoy the architecture and style of this magnificent temple.

Remember that your purpose on this journey is to be initiated into the sacred states of the pyramids of Giza. Many other people claim to have been initiated but have not. If you wish to find out ask them about the harmonic cycles and when the next doorway occurs. If they are an initiate they will be able to respond if not they will not know.

ISNA

This temple as shown in the picture was excavated from under many feet of silt built up over hundreds of years. You can see the roman influence in this temple with it's giant columns and the lotus flowers crowning some. If you look carefully you will also see a giant bug on one of the lotus flowers in the centre section at the top of the pillar. This is not one of the initiate pathway temples.

Areas of this temple are still buried behind the temple under tons of rubble and buildings overhead.

(Which are cracking due to land subsidence.)

The next and largest is at Karnak and we must explain a few details within the complex. We say complex because there are many variations built by a variety of influences incorporated within the Karnak complex.

THE KARNAK COMPLEX

Main entrance with sphinx rows of rams on either side.

The previous picture shows the main entrance to Karnak. As you can see there are rows of rams lining the walkway on either side leading into and through the first pylon. This eventually brings you to the colonnade a collection of dozens of columns each with a specific purpose.

Karnak is part of the initiation pathway but only one section of this complex is necessary.

Here within the colonnade you must find the column. How do you do this you might ask. Well each column has different identities. One is yours! Once found sit by it and meditate for 5 minutes. Then you must exit through the South exit and proceed across to the four statues across the courtyard. Once through turn left and you will enter a sacred place. As you pass through a small arch you will have the sacred lake in front of you. Stand on the pedestal of crystal with the builders on either side facing the lake. Wait for a further 5 minutes and then walk quietly to the side of the lake. (In the ancient times the High Priests would use the same passage to cleans the body and soul of the initiate before they could enter the sacred lake.

2 nd Main colonnade in Karnak.

Central Colonnade. Karnak.

(As with the previous photograph which are different perspective's of the Colonnade area.)

For your journey the final swim is not necessary. It would obviously be nice if you could but let us all keep the peace for the time being.) It is recommended that you drink water that you should be carrying with you at this point.

After you have sat by the lake for 10 minutes your journey through the Karnak Initiation is over so you may then enjoy the remainder of the Complex for there is much to see.

Inside Colonnade Karnak.

General Information:

This area was once known as Thebes. The origins of the town are shrouded in the dark. The town began to attract attention during the Middle Kingdom. Its importance grew after the victory over the Hyksos. Thebe's golden age came with XVIIIth - XXth dynasty. Afterwards it sank into an irremediable decline.

Temple of Luxor: Construction was started by Amenophis III (XVIIIth Dynasty); the temple was dedicated to Amon, Mut and to their son Khonsu. In the reign of Tutankhamon the colonnade was decorated with carvings.

Ramesses II enlarged the temple considerably.

Another view. Karnak Colonnade.

After passing the pylon, with a seated figure of Ramesses II, on each side of the entrance, we enter the Court of Ramesses II, with a small granite chapel of Thutmosis III in the north western corner. Between the columns are standing figures of Amenophis III. On the south side is a Hypostyle hall with four rows of eight papyrus columns, beyond which is the temple proper.

Karnak: The whole precinct was dedicated to Amun and his family.

You will however find large motifs of Thoth and Isis as well as Horus scattered in specific areas throughout the temple site. They are worth searching for. King Tutankhamun and his wife can also be found in the central area by the main Central temple.

(As is shown in the next photograph.)

Statues of King Tutankhamun and his wife can be found at Karnak Temple along with many other statues that abound on the initiation path.

Once inside the colonnade you need to find a pillar that feels right for you. Once this has been done then the next step is to make your way through the colonnade to the transition point from land to water. The rite here was for the initiate to pass through a section which was built entirely from Silica Quartz which has the ability to emit a energy that cleans the soul as well as the physical aura before entering the sacred lake.

The sacred lake. The pillars of truth.

Now in order to follow the correct path look for the statues in the next photograph.

A treasure trove of ancient statues and reliefs. Unusual is it not. (This wasn't easy to find)

To the south of Karnak but still in the general area you will find (with a little searching) the temple of Mut. Inside after you have done the good deed, you will see a statue (headless) of Amun-Ra in one chamber and in the other a complete statue of Sakhmet as in the next photograph.

The next story will depend on what you believe.

The story goes that if you walk around the statue of Sakhmet three times it will bring you luck. If this happens make sure you go in a clockwise direction. The local guides will get you to go anti-clockwise to see if you know the truth all testing it takes place everywhere in Egypt.. In ancient mysticism the forces of good spiralled clockwise in a vortex which extended upwards as in the Great Pyramids. The light on the eyes in the picture is created by a hole in the roof which at a certain time of day shines through directly onto the eyes of the statue.

Statue of Sakhmet. Temple of Ptah. Karnak.

Before visiting Luxor Temple you should take a friendly diversion from the routine which is a trip to Hurghada right on the Red Sea. Nowadays there are plenty of Hotels for the choosing. With many still growing out of the sand.

The bus trip from Luxor one way will take you approximately 5 hours depending on the drivers antics. The scenery during the trip is barren as you will be passing through the Arabian and Eastern Deserts. Still, people live in this barren wasteland.

Your first view of the Red Sea is from the pass as you descend to the flat land on the seaward side of the Ranges. This is a major transition.
